An active membership is the lifeblood of any organization. And, like membership in most organizations, you get out of it what you put into it. We would like to take this opportunity to encourage and to challenge you to become more involved this year. If you haven't been to an event in a while, we would love to see you. If you haven't been involved with the RCBA in the past, please reach out to any of the people listed below to see how you can help. It is well worth the time and effort.

Thoughts of Summer:

Remembering What Makes Life Fun

by Kristen Horne

By the time you read this, I hope to be settled into the slightly slower pace of summer. Right now, however, I am working fast and furious on a new initiative, partnering with my colleagues on 2025 planning, winding down the school year with our four girls including end-of-year projects and performances, and starting summer activities like swim team. Here at the RCBA we are finalizing plans for events like the annual Memorial Service and, in conjunction with our brand-new Wellness Committee, everyone's favorite zoo outing. We are also distilling down the information you shared during our focus groups in the spring and working with the Weathers Group to shape it into some driving priorities for the bar. Our committees and court liaison groups are planning gatherings and events, our fall ethics CLE is being built...the list goes on and on! There is so much great work happening, and we hope that you're feeling the benefits.

We often have a tendency to fill our time and minds with all of the things we are doing. Your list is just as long or longer than mine. In a recent conversation, a mentor asked me when I'm having any fun. It's such a powerful question, so I'm asking all of you:

What makes you feel great?

My answer is at least as long as the list of what I'm doing. I'm trying to be mindful of all the little moments of joy that pop up all around me. If you're interested, here are some of my favorite things in summertime.

- The smell of rain on hot bricks.
- Salted slices of Johns Island tomatoes.
- People wearing dapper hats, extra points if paired with seersucker.
- Hugs from kids in wet bathing suits.
- The magic of fireflies at dusk.
- Cool crisp sheets after a long day.

Every day at work and out in the world, each of you is doing good. I hope you're doing something that makes you feel good too. Feel free to drop me a line and tell me about it. It would make me feel great.

Bar Bites:

Direct Examination

by Jamie Smith

As attorneys, we have a continuing duty to stay abreast of changes in the law, and as professionals, we are on a continuous journey to become the best advocates we can be. So beyond attending required CLEs, we strive to integrate legal education into our daily routines and are always on the look-out for new techniques and strategies to incorporate into our respective practices. Like most of us, I keep up with advance sheets, attend seminars, read countless books and blogs, join list serves, and pick the brains of other Bar members in order to glean as much legal knowledge as I can. And now, thanks to three of state's brightest (and most hilarious) attorneys, I begin each week with an entertaining dose of professional enlightenment by listening to the Direct Examination podcast, with new episodes dropping each Monday.

If you haven't listened to Direct Examination yet, you need to. Now in its second season, the podcast is hosted by attorneys Dayne Phillips (Price Benowitz LLP), Amber Fulmer (Moore Taylor Law Firm, PA), and Joseph Bias (Vernis & Bowling of Columbia, LLC), who interview South Carolina's legal "celebrities" on topics ranging from practice pointers, to lawyer discipline, to politics, to war stories. As a true crime fan-girl,

I was thrilled to listen to the Direct Examination episodes in which Dick Harpootlian and Jack Swerling discussed their respective roles in the Pee Wee Gaskins trial, and the podcast's interview with North Carolina attorney David Rudolf, who was part of the defense team in the Michael Peterson murder trial made famous by the riveting documentary The Staircase. That said, Direct Examination is by no means a true crime podcast; its guests include well-known lawyers from a variety of practice areas, as well as judges, politicians, Bar and ODC staff, and even rapper Ducati James (commonly known to his fellow SC Bar members as Eric Poston, Esquire).

In addition to gaining insight into the practice and profession from some of South Carolina's greatest legal minds, listeners are guaranteed to get a few chuckles as well. The show takes on a light-hearted—even comedic—tone, and it is evident that the hosts and their guests are enjoying themselves. The conversation is personable and, at times, personal (did you know that Justice Few wore the Blue Devil mascot costume for Duke University?). Having had the privilege of working with the Direct Examination team as a guest on their "Plaintiff Roundtable" episode, I can say with certainty Dayne, Amber, and Joseph are folks who can get down to business while having a good time. And so, wanting to find out what they do for fun off the air, the podcast hosts let me interview them for Bar Bites—check out what they had to say below. Then be sure to download and subscribe to Direct Examination on iTunes, Stitcher, Spotify, or wherever you get your podcasts!

As always, your fellow Bar members want to know what you have been loving lately—whether it is an album, book, concert, film, podcast, restaurant, or local hotspot, we want to hear about it! Please email your recommendations to me at JSmith@mklawgroup.com or to Jess Gooding at JGooding@goingslaw-firm.com.

What's your favorite watering hole on a summer day in the Midlands?

Dayne: "No favorite place. I'm a beer or bourbon guy depending on the occasion."

Amber: "Being pregnant keeps me from enjoying finer beverages at the moment, but I do love a Pelican Snoball – half strawberry and half mango is my poison of choice!"

Joseph: "The Aristocrat."

What's at the top of your summer reading list?

Dayne: "My future is filled with many pages of discovery and transcripts to read. Sad, but true."

Amber: "I try to read as much as I can, so here is the very scattered list that's on my bedside table for now: A People's History of the United States, Watership Down, Black Hawk Down, and The Light We Lost."

Joseph: "Looking forward to Shea Serrano's Movies and Other Things book in October, before that going to be reading Hamilton by Ron Chernow."

Apart from Direct Examination, what's your favorite podcast?

Dayne: "The Maximum Lawyer. It's a podcast for solo/small law firms addressing issues related to managing and growing a law practice."

Amber: "Other than our podcast I've listened to Up and Vanished, Serial, and That's Lit. Other than that, I'm an NPR girl."

Joseph: "One Shining Podcast. (But a shout out to our producer Brindy's That's Lit podcast, which is fun even though I don't read much)."

Say it, Don't Type it, With Dragon:

Why Should I Care About Dictating?

by Bill Booth

So, what is the normal routine for you as you start the day practicing law? Responding to emails, adding time entries, reviewing emails sent as reminders or follow-ups, and providing instructions for staff. Yes, the most common task for the lawyer beginning each day is dealing with communications. How do you do this? Inputting by typing on a keyboard or just talking to your staff? Consider using Dragon NaturallySpeaking for increasing your productivity for these daily tasks.

Most lawyers have heard of Dragon and many lawyers either use Dragon or had a bad experience trying to use Dragon several years ago. Maybe the voice recognition was not as good as expected, or Dragon was slow on startup, or occasionally crashed in the middle of a lengthy document. Whatever your experience was, if you are not using Dragon you should consider that it has improved such that reviewers find using Dragon is equivalent to typing at 100 words per minute. The time freed up through dictating can make a big difference to what you can do in a day.

Dictation Basics

You can use Dragon to dictate text into most Windows applications in just three steps.

1. Open the application you want to use.
2. Click inside the window or field where you want to dictate.
3. Turn on Dragon's microphone and speak! As you dictate, try to speak at a normal pace and in phrases or complete sentences. When dictating, you can use Dragon commands for common formatting: For including punctuation with your dictation, just say what you want, and where you want it. For most

SAY	TO
New line	Start a new line – this is the same as pressing the Enter key once.
New paragraph	Start a new paragraph, including space to offset it from the previous one. Dragon automatically capitalizes the next word you speak.
Tab or Tab key	Enter a wide space, usually to align text. This is the same as pressing the Tab key.
Space bar	Add a space

dictation, say “period” or “question mark” in the appropriate places as you dictate.

Current Versions

Dragon Naturally Speaking 15 is the current version and there are two choices for getting the most out of Dragon: Dragon Professional Individual and Dragon Legal Individual. The legal version is almost twice the cost of the professional version, but may not be necessary for the typical lawyer. Both versions are typical desktop programs.

For setting up your Dragon software at a law office, using a USB headset is recommended, and the application runs best on a computer with an i3 processor and at least 8gb of memory. There is a mobile app called Dragon Anywhere and this application integrates with the desktop application for producing a document or memorandum. The mobile Dragon Anywhere application is ideal for creating case information when waiting or dealing with being in the courthouse. The Dragon Anywhere mobile application requires a monthly subscription fee.

Suggestions for buying and implementing Dragon

Dragon software can be purchased directly from retail online sites such as Amazon.com. But a third-party seller will usually include initial support for installing and getting started with Dragon. One third-party seller is Tekton Systems with an office in Columbia (800-888-1778), and the website is www.tektonsystems.com. An online demo can be scheduled using an online scheduling system, and usually there are one-hour time slots available at several times during the week. For self-taught, there are numerous videos available on YouTube. The main website for Dragon is www.nuance.com/dragon, and on the page for use by lawyers, there is an excellent testimonial video by Robert D’Auria, a Bedford, Massachusetts-based lawyer, discussing how he and his law firm have been using Dragon for the past several years.

Dragon includes access to an Interactive Tutorial which allows the user to be trained with progressive simulations for most features of Dragon. One caveat is that most cloud-based practice management services are not compatible with voice dictation technology. There is a work around requiring the use of the dictation box for transcribing and then adding the text into the cloud-based system.

Other Uses for Dragon

The use of custom commands allows the user to have inserted text after you say a custom text command. An example would be to say, “Enter Signature” and then Dragon will enter a specific signature block for email communication. Dragon can also give voice commands through Windows for opening a site in

email communication. Dragon can also give voice commands through Windows for opening a site in Google or to search in Google. You can also use Dragon to initiate an email by simply saying "send an email to John Smith," and Outlook will open with an email ready to add content and send to John Smith.

So, is it important to you to be more productive and give your fingers a rest from typing so much? The Dragon NaturallySpeaking product gives you the ability to do things faster and perhaps bypass your staff for doing many tasks during the day. There are several easy ways to get a demonstration of Dragon's abilities, including the use of a third-party seller or third-party consultant to guide you through getting started. Good luck if you are interested or decide to discover if there are other features of Dragon you have not used yet.

Checking In With Past Presidents:

Danny Crowe

What are you up to these days?

After three decades in a big firm, I now am in my fifth year with my own small and energetic firm and still enjoying representing cities and serving as a mediator.

What hobbies do you enjoy, or more generally, what interests do you have outside of law?

My hobbies are walking at the Riverfront Park, reading, travel, and showing photos of my adorable grandchildren to anyone who will look at them.

What is the best piece of advice you have ever received?

The best piece of professional advice I ever received was provided to me by my mentor Roy Bates: If you don't know the answer to a question, say "I don't know, but I will find out." Do not guess or blow smoke.

What is your favorite book, movie, or music and why?

My favorite movie, as a lifelong romantic and idealist, is "Casablanca."

What was your favorite RCBA memory or accomplishment?

My favorite RCBA memories are my service as the President in 1997 and my selection in 2002 as the first lawyer recipient of the Mathew Perry Civility Award. Both are high honors in my book.

Checking In With Past Presidents:

Frank Knowlton

What are you up to these days?

I am just finishing my 26th year at Nelson Mullins and now have the privilege of being a team leader with team members in DC, Florida, Tennessee, and SC. George Cauthen was my predecessor as team leader and my mentor throughout my career here. The firm has grown a great deal since I started and it continues to be an exciting and rewarding place to be. My children have all graduated from college and moved to different cities. My daughter just moved to Charleston after 8 years in Jackson Hole and my two sons are in Denver and Wyoming. Keeping up with them is always a priority for me.

What hobbies do you enjoy, or more generally, what interests do you have outside of law?

I still enjoy running, but found rock climbing several years ago and am dedicated to that sport. It's been a long progression from running to triathlons to mountaineering and now to rock climbing. I met my wife through rock climbing, and we climb frequently in the Red River Gorge (in Kentucky, where she owns a house), as well as in other parts of the country, France, and Switzerland.

What is the best piece of advice you have ever received?

“Absorb the energy.” We encounter many folks in our profession and in life who have high emotions over issues for reasons you can’t always appreciate or understand. This advice helps reinforce the discipline to absorb that high energy without letting it get in the way of your understanding their position or issue.

What is your favorite book, movie, or music and why? [Or lunch spot or dinner spot]

I recently finished Nightingale by Kristin Hannah. It is an historical fiction novel about the impact of WWII on the civilian population in France and told from a woman’s perspective. It was very well written and extremely powerful. If you read it in public, say on an airplane, be sure to have some Kleenex around (according to a friend). As for lunch and dinner spots, we always enjoy the Gourmet Shop for lunches and brunches and dinners at some of the new spots like Hendrix and Halls, as well as the old standbys like Motor Supply and Mr. Friendly’s.

What was your favorite RCBA memory or accomplishment?

One of my favorite memories was when we formed the Friends of the Richland County Courthouse. The purpose was to study the potential for building a new courthouse to replace the one that we have which has far outlasted its intended 25 year useful life span. During this process, the entire RCBA Executive Committee was very involved and got to work closely with Justice Toal who was (and remains) a passionate advocate. Unfortunately, our timing was not the best as the great recession hit us just at the wrong time, but I understand the process is on-going.

Building Strength: Practicing Yoga in the Light

by Tina Cundari

For years, I kept my yoga practice a secret. I did not tell anyone outside of my close circle of family and friends that I was practicing yoga. I especially did not talk about yoga at the office. Perhaps it was because of the stereotypes about yoga and the people who practice yoga. Some might think yogis are weird, flaky people who cannot keep a job. Others might think of yogis as hippies or sun worshippers who contort their bodies into strange shapes.

Another reason I may have been keeping my yoga practice a secret was because I did not want anyone to know how badly I needed to be doing yoga. I did not want anyone to know that I was struggling with the pressures of practicing law. I did not want anyone to know how nervous I was before big events such as trial or hearings, or that at times I had difficulty catching my breath. I did not want anyone to know how panicked I was on the inside as I tried to hold it all together on the outside.

When I first began practicing yoga, I did not know how much it would help me. I practiced yoga to stretch and to relax. I thought it would be a nice complement to running and other exercise.

What is yoga? Yoga can be defined in many ways. The word “yoga” comes from the Sanskrit word “yuj” which means to bind, to connect, or to unite. So one way to define yoga is that it is a practice of connection, a practice of connecting the mind, the body, and the spirit. As B.K.S. Iyengar wrote, “We need sound bodies so we can develop sound minds.”

Yoga has many benefits. Yoga builds strength and flexibility, improves respiratory and cardiovascular functions, and increases energy. Yoga calms the mind and improves the ability to focus. Yoga helps alleviate tension that accumulates in the body.

I have experienced these benefits and more. Yoga has provided me with tools to manage stress and to respond to difficult situations with steadiness and ease. Yoga has taught me to welcome fear rather than to be afraid of it. Yoga has increased my confidence and taught me to stand tall, physically and from within. Perhaps most importantly, yoga has helped me find my breath.

The beauty of yoga is that it meets you where you are. No matter how tight your hamstrings, you can practice yoga. Yoga is not a performance sport, and you do not have to master every pose on the first day. A skilled teacher will show you how to modify the postures so they are accessible.

A key to experiencing the benefits of yoga is finding the right teacher for you. A good yoga teacher is someone who has a strong yoga practice herself and who is knowledgeable about the body and about the philosophy and history of yoga. A good yoga teacher is someone who is professional, ethical, and inspiring.

A common misperception about yoga is that it is only about stretching and relaxation. Although it is true that a yoga class will leave you feeling open and relaxed, yoga is challenging. It requires a lot of strength. Have you ever heard of warrior poses? Another common misperception is that you must be able to touch your toes before you can start. If that were true, very few people would be practicing yoga. (By the way, if you can't touch your toes, try bending your knees. And if you still can't touch your toes, then you really need to be doing yoga.)

In 2014, after practicing yoga for ten years, I decided to become certified to teach. I did not know if I would ever teach, but I knew that the teacher training would be a way to deepen my practice and to spend time doing something I love. Many people gave me the courage to teach. First is Stacey Millner-Collins. Stacey has been my primary yoga teacher for 14 years, and after leading me through teacher training (along with four other excellent teachers), she invited me to teach a weekly class at her yoga studio, City Yoga. Next is Beth Padgett, Director of Lawyers Helping Lawyers. Beth encouraged me to teach to lawyers and law students. A yoga teacher herself, Beth understands how helpful yoga can be to people struggling with mental health issues. Finally, I would not be teaching without the support of fellow lawyers Shannon Bobertz and John Hearn. Shannon and John have encouraged me every step of the way and helped me make an "office yoga" video for the Bar.

If you want to try yoga but taking a class at a yoga studio is too big of a leap, there are many resources available. Stacey Millner-Collins teaches a class called Yoga in Practice that airs on SCETV weekday mornings at 6:30 a.m. and weekends at 9:00 and 9:30 a.m. Another great resource is glo.com. This is a website with a variety of yoga teachers and classes. The cost is $22.99/month, about the price of two public yoga classes. A free online option is Yoga with Adriene. An internet search will lead you to this lovely, skillful teacher.

And if you're ready to take the leap and "go public," I'd love to see you in one of my classes. I teach a Basic Yoga class at City Yoga every Saturday morning at 8:30. There's no hiding my yoga practice any more.

Attorney Wellness:

Present and Future Challenges for the Profession

by Mike Polk and Van Horger

Observing that “To be a good lawyer, one has to be a healthy lawyer,” the National Task Force on Lawyer Well-Being published its 2017 report, The Path to Lawyer Well-Being: Practical Recommendations For Positive Change. The report is extremely comprehensive and serves as both a reminder and a grave warning of the pressures we face in this profession, citing studies finding that nationally between 21% and 36% of attorneys qualify as problem drinkers, that 28% struggle with some level of depression, and that 19% struggle with anxiety.

The report specifically noted South Carolina’s efforts in tackling the issues of lawyer wellness:

The South Carolina Bar’s Lawyer Wellness Committee, launched in 2014 and featuring a “Living Above the Bar” website, is a good model for well-being committees. In 2016, the ABA awarded this Committee the E. Smythe Gambrell Professionalism Award, which honors excellence and innovation in professionalism programs.

We reached out to South Carolina Supreme Court Justice John W. Kittredge, who is attuned to and has worked with the wellness issue. Justice Kittredge noted that, like everyone, he struggles to find the time to do everything he wants to do, underscoring the need to support the “wellness” effort.

Justice Kittredge chairs the commission on the profession. About eight years ago, the commission discussed the pressures of practicing law. Many well-known and respected attorneys vented about the constant pressure caused by the need to be available 24/7. The lawyers expressed that, because of the presence of cell phones, email, and other communication devices, they had no opportunities to untether themselves from work. Given the genuine angst that emerged from this discussion, coupled with the reputation of these great lawyers, Justice Kittredge took action. He went to then-Chief Justice Toal and to Bar Director Bob Wells. These meetings led to the formation of the Wellness Committee, a formal committee of the Bar. Mike Etheridge was tapped to lead the Wellness Committee, and Justice Kittredge noted the fabulous job Mike and the other outstanding committee members have done, culminating in the award mentioned above. Wellness presentations are becoming increasingly frequent at CLEs and JCLEs. In fact, the Court has altered the CLE ethics/substance abuse and mental health requirement to be expanded to include a wellness component.

Justice Kittredge also highlighted South Carolina Appellate Court Rule 428 for us. Through the commission on the profession, the Court implemented the rule in light of the wellness challenges facing attorneys and a desire for a compassionate response when a lawyer needs help. The traditional model has been a knee-jerk complaint to the Office of Disciplinary Counsel (ODC) when a lawyer is in trouble, but sometimes an ODC complaint is overkill, particularly if there has been no harm to a client. The Court wanted an alternative to the punitive ODC option by providing a more compassionate path between doing nothing, often as the attorney spirals, and a formal complaint. Rule 428 is designed to accomplish that. The Rule provides a mechanism for reporting a lawyer when there is concern about a lawyer's possible impairment. The rule could be used if it appears a lawyer is in cognitive decline. It could also be used to help a lawyer who, struggling with the pressures of practicing law, turns to alcohol. Rule 428 is designed to allow the Bar to help the lawyer in need and hopefully avoid a spiral causing ODC involvement. The procedure is simple: there is an initial report to the Bar's Executive Director. From there, friends/lawyers in the community are called upon to assist. The response is tailored to the particular situation, but all with the ultimate goal of helping the lawyer without discipline. The 428 approach makes sense when there has been no harm to a client. Where a client has been harmed, the traditional ODC referral will most likely be needed.

Justice Kittredge noted that "wellness" covers many areas. We are trying to fashion rules and approaches that respond in an effective way to the real-world pressures of lawyers. Responding to help lawyers with grace and compassion should be viewed as a strength in our profession. Further, investing in others to create a healthier community of lawyers serves both lawyers and our clients.

In addition to emphasizing Rule 428, Justice Kittredge discussed with us many additional facets relating to the lawyer well-being. We hope to be able to highlight many of these in future issues. In addition, the RCBA has created its own wellness committee, about which you will see much more in the future.

Supreme Court Beautification Project Update

Over the past year, South Carolina county bar associations, law firms, and individual lawyers have banded together to make over 160 separate donations to fund our Supreme Court beautification project. All have been moved by the need to provide a safer, healthier, and more attractive place for the members of our highest court and their staff to work. We have placed a line of trees and planters along the tree bed at First Citizens Bank that will grow and provide much-needed afternoon shade from the Columbia sun. We have removed the advertisement banners that formerly hung in front of our court. We have established formal plans to complete work in the near future.

While we are not there yet, we are getting close. If you or your firm have yet to donate, then please consider doing so. All donations are tax deductible and every penny goes toward bricks and mortar. The result will be improvements we all can be proud of, enhancements that will last for the next century.
